1 Consumer rights following valuation

1.1 In this notice "the Act" means the National Credit Act 34 of 2005, "you" means TEST Borrower and "we" means TEST Credit Provider, registered credit provider NCRCP00000. On 13 October 2026 you gave notice under section 127(1) of the Act to terminate agreement AF-NCA-S127-TEST and surrender the asset described above. This is our notice under section 127(2) of the Act: the estimated value of the asset is R 1,250.00, as valued by TEST Valuer on 20 October 2026. The estimate is not a guaranteed sale price.

1.2 Within 10 business days after you receive this notice you may unconditionally withdraw your termination notice and resume possession of the asset, unless you are in default under the agreement, as section 127(3) of the Act provides. To withdraw, tell us in writing at the address in the letterhead.

1.3 If you do not withdraw within that period, we must sell the asset as soon as practicable for the best price reasonably obtainable, as section 127(4) of the Act requires. We will not sell it before that period ends. Until the sale, the agreement continues and the amounts due under it remain payable.

1.4 After the sale we will credit your account with the proceeds less the reasonable costs of the sale, and send you a written notice of the settlement value of the agreement immediately before the sale, the gross amount realised, the net proceeds and the amount credited or debited to your account, as section 127(5) of the Act requires. If the net proceeds exceed the settlement value we will pay you the difference. If they are less, we will demand the balance, and you will have 10 business days after receiving that demand to pay it before we may begin legal proceedings for it.

1.5 If you dispute this valuation, tell us in writing within the 10 business days in clause 1.2. After the sale, section 128 of the Act allows you to apply to the National Consumer Tribunal to review it.

1.6 If the sale realises more than the settlement value, section 127 of the Act requires us to remit the surplus to you with our notice after the sale. So that we can, give us in writing, within 10 business days after you receive this notice, the details of a bank account in your name, with proof that it is yours. If you do not, we will pay it as soon as you give us those details. If another credit provider has a registered credit agreement with you concerning these same goods, section 127(6)(a) requires remittance to the National Consumer Tribunal instead.
